

Through what channels can you get honey onto the European market?

Last updated:
23 August 2015

The European honey trade is highly concentrated, with only a few dominant importers in each country. These importers generally supply their honey directly to industrial users and retailers, who account for around 25% and 75% of the total honey market respectively. Monofloral honeys and organic honeys comprise particularly interesting sub-segments for those exporters who are looking for product distinction.